Course Title: The Power and Politics of Global Pharmaceutical Policy

Outline Version Code:

Course Description:

This course is designed Pharmaceutical Science students who are curious about pharmaceutical public policy at the global level and the interrelationship between global and domestic health policy issues. There are no prerequisites required for this course. The course will introduce students to the basic concepts and policy issues relevant to global pharmaceutical policy. Particular emphasis will be placed on how governments in different jurisdictions manage their public health responsibilities, the tension between economic imperatives and health objectives, global obligations, and pressure from special interest groups all relevant to pharmaceutical policy. Student discussion and debate is strongly encouraged in this class. This course is designed to ensure maximum student participation (class discussions and presentations) and requires that students complete the core readings each week so they are prepared for class discussion.
